

Aggressive and frightened animals at the veterinary clinic

Treatment of animals with QUANTEC®

Experience report by
Cristina Delgado Pascual

In my veterinary practice, I am often faced with chronic diseases that conventional medicine cannot help, but only alleviate with drugs that the animal has to take for its whole life, and which are not without a number of side-effects.

Diseases such as asthma, chronic dermatitis, allergies, auto-immune processes, chronic gingivitis in cats, chronic intestinal inflammatory disease, etc., are some of those ailments that can only be relieved by using corticoids, sometimes continuously, with the risks these suppose to animals' health.

In these chronic cases, difficult to solve with conventional medicine, I usually recommend treatment with QUANTEC® to owners, although I also often use it in acute diseases or after surgery to speed up recovery.

One of the advantages of this system is that it is not at all invasive for the animals. Something that is very important, especially in the treatment of cats that are frightened and aggressive in the veterinary surgery.

QUANTEC® does not disturb the animal at all, since the session can even be done without it being there, using a digital photo and a lock of its hair. I obviously prefer to see the animal in my surgery, but as I mentioned, for certain cats, the visit to the vet's is extremely stressful and this factor can trigger an asthma attack, for example, in an asthmatic animal, or aggression in frightened animals.

I have an IVAS diploma in acupuncture for animals, but on many occasions, even if acupuncture is indicated for the treatment of a disease, I prefer to use QUANTEC®, as it is practically impossible to apply acupuncture with certain animals. With QUANTEC®, a checkup every 2-3 months is sufficient. There are also owners who don't have time to come to weekly acupuncture sessions and the QUANTEC® treatment is extremely convenient for them. Very often, when I would like to apply a few acupuncture points to an animal but it doesn't cooperate or isn't present at the session, I put these points in the entries of the QUANTEC® treatment so that it sends it the effect of these points as vibrations. I call it "virtual acupuncture".

Since the QUANTEC® database contains orthomolecular supplements and natural products that are not on sale in Spain, I have created my own database with natural supplements for animals and people that can be purchased in Spain. So, when I treat an animal with a certain physical disease, as well as the random check made by the device, I test within the QUANTEC® database what natural or homeopathic product the animal needs to treat its disease.

Another advantage of this system is that it allows me to create nosodes of the disease I want to treat, putting in the photo, x-ray or ultrasound of the affected area, thereby creating a personalised nosode for each animal. For example, if I want to treat an animal with conjunctivitis, I create a nosode with the photograph of the diseased eye. If what I want to treat is a chronic hepatitis, I create a nosode with the photograph of the ultrasound of its liver.

In treating animals, it is extremely important to harmonise the family environment, as they "absorb" the energy and conflicts of the atmosphere around them, and this can make them ill.

For this reason, in each treatment I put in one or several affirmations so that the animal adapts to its environment and to the other animals or persons it lives with. Very often this is not sufficient and an HealingSheet has to be done for the owners and other family pets, even if they tell us the family environment is harmonious and the animals are respected and are happy living together, as it may be that the owners just don't know what their pets are really feeling.

It's funny, when some people read their animals HealingSheet, they identify with the information that appears. Actually, this is not surprising, as animals often reflect and somatize the conflicts around them, and specifically those of their owners. Some people, when they read the entries QUANTEC® has found, exclaim: "It looks like it did the examination on me!"
